

Johnson College was cited recently in the November 21, 2007 on-line edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education:

Lots going on in Lackawanna County: According to the Scranton Times-Tribune, colleges in Northeast Pennsylvania are building a number of new structures. Johnson College broke ground on a small classroom addition. Penn State's Worthington Scranton campus broke ground on a $6-million, 11,000-square-foot business school. Lackawanna College is planning a community building that will house a school library, a public-safety department and police academy, and dormitory rooms. The University of Scranton is building a $26-million residence hall and a 118,000-square-foot, $35-million student center. Marywood University is planning a library expansion. And the Baptist Bible College and Seminary is planning to spend $50-million on projects over the next 15 years; a 70,000-square-foot addition to the student center, which would include basketball courts and a climbing wall, will be done by 2010.
